Hairball:

Is Not a Laxative or Lubricant

- Laxatives and lubricants should be used sparingly as they can disrupt normal feline digestion.

Contains No Mineral Oil

- Mineral oil disrupts normal digestion and blocks nutrient absorption in cats and should be used with caution.

Contains No Herbs

- Diuretic herbs in some hairball products may actually dehydrate your pet, reduce skin moisture, cause skin and coat dysfunction, and increase hairball formation.

Skin and Hair Health Support

- Lecithin supports nail, hair, and skin health as well as skin hydration and resiliency. Healthy skin directly influences how well the hair will grow, function, and shed. Deficiencies of Lecithin can lead to loss of skin elasticity, dryness, scaliness, increased fur matting, discoloration of hair, lack of hair regrowth, and increased shedding.
- Omega 3 & 6 Fatty Acids along with Lecithin have been added to support skin hydration, resiliency, and hair health. These Fatty Acids not only provide essential fats for skin and coat condition, but they also support the G.I. tract.
- Biotin is needed for healthy hair and skin.
- Methionine is a sulfur containing amino acid commonly lacking in feline diets. It supports hair strength, quality, and health. It also supports skin tone and pliability.
- Zinc is involved in keratin and collagen production, which is important for hair and skin health. Zinc is required for fatty acid metabolism. It also helps maintain healthy skin tissue and hair follicles.
- Cranberry Powder helps to support the urinary tract.

Hair Ball Support

- Psyllium is a soluble fiber that supports G.I. tract health and function.
